Sampling is a wide-studied fundamental problem in data management area. The problem becomes particularly difficult when the input data is distributed and endless, which is so-called distributed streaming data. The sampling needs to be done uniformly across the distributed sites by only one pass scanning. Moreover, sampling algorithms should be lightweight to avoid extra space complexity. This work proposed an algorithm, which uses statistical method skipping over streaming data, to generate samples in uniform distributions.